

German January Exports Up 0.2 Percent

Friday, 26 February 2010

The latest figures released by the Federal Statistical Office, showed that Germany's exports have steadily increase for the month of January 2010. It seems that the Germany exports were up by 0.2 percent, compared to a very sharp decline for the month of December 2009.

Basically, Germany exported euro64 billion ($86.76 billion) worth of goods to various nations around the world. Germany's import on the other hand, stands at euro56 billion for the month.

Personally, I believe that the world market is surely picking up steam at a very slow pace. With more consumer spending money, I'm sure that this will surely help the world market to gradually recover.
