

Senate to Pass Jobless Aid and Business Tax Breaks

Saturday, 06 March 2010

With the national debt reaching at an astounding $12.5 trillion dollars, the senate has miraculously approved the recently proposed jobless aid and other business tax breaks. Generally, the senate mentioned that these incentives might generally increase the national debt to a very uncomfortable level.

According to sources, it seems that the jobless aid was designed to help people who were unemployed to receive up to 99 weeks of benefits. Basically, the senate voted 66-34 supporting the proposed bill.

Personally, I find such jobless aid to be beneficial to unemployed people, but by further raising the nation's debt, this will surely create more problems for the country.
